Student Union

KARE has elected representation on the university's highest governing body. This includes elected representatives from various stakeholder groups such as faculty members, administrative staff, and student bodies, ensuring that diverse perspectives are included in decision-making processes at the institutional level. KARE has a diverse elected representation on the university's highest governing body, the Senate, University Board and the Advisory Board. The Students' Union works in partnership with the University to jointly deliver a great educational experience. We want to ensure that students are valued partners in their education and able to shape their curriculum and learning experience.

The key features of the representative governance structure at KARE as follows :

- 1. University Academic Senate: The elected University Academic Senate represents faculty members. It ensures that professors can share their opinions on important academic issues, such as curriculum development and policies. This involvement promotes collaboration and transparency in decision-making.
- 2. Student Organizations: Students can elect leaders for various student organizations. These leaders act as representatives, voicing student needs and concerns to the university administration. By participating in these organizations, students can engage in leadership roles, organize events, and advocate for their interests.
- 3. Employee Communities: KARE University also supports employee communities to promote staff interests.

The establishment of student unions is acknowledged and facilitated by KARE

Director student affairs supervises the democratic process of Student Council elections every year. The faculty representatives are determined by the representatives elected by each department. From the faculty representatives, the Student Council's elected chairperson is selected. KARE recognises the autonomy of students to establish student unions.

Creating a Students' Union (Peace, Justice, and Strong Institutions) in a university setting is an excellent initiative. It focuses on promoting peace, justice, and inclusive institutions, and a university student union dedicated to this goal can be an effective platform for advocacy, education, and action.

- Promote awareness and education around issues of peace, justice, and strong institutions both locally and globally.
- Engage in advocacy for policy changes within the university, local community, or at national/international levels.
- Foster a culture of inclusion and equality among students and stakeholders.
- Mobilize students for peace-building initiatives, justice reforms, and institutional strengthening.
- Collaborate with other student organizations, faculty, and external stakeholders (NGOs, government bodies) to work on SDG 16 issues.
